

Co-operation by Mutual Transfer of Manuscripts

Co-operation among scientifically qualified journals is essential for providing authors with a proper wide audience in the interest of the progress of sciences. The reviewing process of a scientifically qualified paper occasionally comes to the conclusion that the manuscript might be more suitable for a different journal than the one to which it was originally submitted. The author might be inclined to agree to such a transfer of his/her manuscript to a different journal, if the original submission-date of the manuscript would be maintained and the related materials transmitted as well

In order to facilitate this transfer of manuscripts between the different sections of The European Physical Journal and the cooperating journals, the Editors-in-Chief of these journals have come to an agreement for the transfer of suitable manuscripts from one journal to another journal that should avoid unnecessary publication delays.

Editorial Transfer Agreement

1. The Editors-in-Chief of the journals listed on www.epj.org have agreed to facilitate the transfer of suitable manuscripts from one journal (hereafter called the "transferring journal") to another journal (hereafter called the "receiving journal").
2. In case of such an intended transfer of a submitted manuscript, the Editor-in-Chief of the transferring journal asks the author for his/her agreement.
3. Thereafter the Editor-in-Chief of the receiving journal is contacted by the Editor-in-Chief of the transferring journal. In case such a manuscript has already been positively reviewed, the Editor-in-Chief of the transferring journal sends the manuscript and appropriate material from the reviewing process to the Editor-in-Chief of the receiving journal who is encouraged to accept the manuscript under discussion.
4. The Editor-in-Chief of the receiving journal will maintain the original submission date of the manuscript to the transferring journal. He/She may ask for additional reports at his/her discretion.
5. The final decision (accept, reject, further transfer) stays with the Editor-in-Chief of the receiving journal. In case of further transfer, the history of transfers of the manuscript under consideration must be documented.
6. This agreement extends to other journals when newly listed on www.epj.org
